Should I Study Abroad?

The goals of the program, in which students of each university spend six months at the partner campus, are to raise students’ international awareness and understanding of an increasingly global marketplace. Study abroad gives you an opportunity to experience another culture, meet people from diverse backgrounds and gain international experience, language and communication skills. Study abroad offers life experience valued by employers. The knowledge you gain and memories you make will last forever.

Study Abroad in Germany
at Reutlingen University

Diversify Your Education
What Does Reutlingen University Offer?

Reutlingen offers seven fields of study and several master’s degree programs, including:

- School of Informational Science
- European School of Business
- School of Chemistry
- School of Textiles
- Bio- and Process Analytics
- Textile Technology/Textile Management

Who Can Apply?

Students in any major in the Department of Polymer and Fiber Engineering may apply after freshman year.

Why Reutlingen?

Auburn’s polymer and fiber engineering program has established a strong academic relationship with Reutlingen University. Our curricula are very similar and some of Reutlingen’s courses are taught in English. Students can take classes that meet Auburn’s engineering requirements.

When Should You Go?

Auburn students may spend spring or fall semester in Reutlingen. Students should apply approximately six months prior to departure.

How Much Does it Cost?

Excluding travel, the cost is approximately the same as a semester at Auburn University. Living expenses may vary, making the total cost different for each student. Students must register with Auburn’s Study Abroad office to receive international insurance, financial aid, scholarships, and PACT (pre-paid tuition) plan funds for the semester abroad.
